
Here is the list of foods, toiletries and medications in Australia that contain the six nasty colours that were the focus of the Kids First Campaign in 2008

The artificial colours listed (102, 104, 110, 122, 124, 129) can increase children's activity levels and/or inattention, leading to educational difficulties. To protect children, these are currently being phased out of foods in the UK and the European Parliament has ruled that any product containing these colours after the end of 2009 must have a warning: "may have an adverse effect on activity and attention in children."

Meanwhile Australian children are still being exposed to them in the products listed below.

Researchers in Europe have found

- 34 products containing these colours in Sweden
- 119 products containing these colours in Austria
- 344 products containing these colours in Denmark
- Over 1,000 products containing these colours in UK

HOW MANY IN AUSTRALIA? 1154 (as at summer 2009 – note that some colours have been removed since: read the label!)

If the entry is in RED then the manufacturer has informed us or said publicly that the target colours will be removed from their product! Read the label carefully.

Disclaimer: The products on this website contained the additives listed at the date of purchase. While the website is updated regularly, by the time you find the product, some of the additives listed below may have been removed by manufacturers. You can use this website as a guide to products that have contained the suspect additives, but you will need to check the ingredients lists on the products themselves to be sure of the current ingredients. Please email us if you find any changes.
